Council of Europe Charter on EDC/HRE

HRE involves:

Knowledge – learning about human rights

Skills for action- learning for human rights

Attitudes and values - learning through and learning in human rights

HRE, process and outcome

Pedagogical principles of HRE

Holistic learning

Open-ended learning

Values clarification

Participation

Co-operative learning

Experiential learning (learning through experience)

Learner-centredness

HRE and other educational fields: transversality?

Citizenship education / Education for democratic citizenship

Personal and social education

Values education / Moral education

Global education

Intercultural education

Anti-racist education

Development education

Education for sustainable development / Environmental education

Peace education

Questions for “re-thinking” and discussion:

Is HRE needed?

Is it needed for vulnerable groups? Is it needed for “privileged” groups? For everyone?

How should HR be learned: In formal and non-formal learning sectors?

HRE online?

Should HRE be different/specific for vulnerable groups? If yes, how?

Is HRE a threat to cultural identity?

What competences HR educators should have today?

Are the above presented principles up-to-date?
